With HyperMotion technology, players on the field and watching on TV will be seeing the game as it is being played in real time. Every action, from running, sliding, shooting and kicking will give real impact to the game. Players will feel physically and emotionally connected with their surroundings. For more details on this exciting addition, including a clip from an upcoming PS4 trailer, visit Mike Vasquez, Head of Pro Clubs MV: How does HyperMotion technology work? MV: The technology is based on collecting data from 22 professional footballers playing the game at the highest intensity, from many angles, and over one complete game.

This data, which is extremely difficult to collect using conventional methods, is then turned into 3D models that are then used in the engine to create a simulation of what a player is doing on the pitch. This data can be used to increase realism on the pitch, and to make the game more consistent and fair. It can be used to ensure that players look, act and move like they do in reality, in real time, when on the pitch. MV: What does this mean for pro players? MV: It means that players can become far more involved in what's going on in the game. They have a strong physical and emotional connection with the game, and the more time they spend on the pitch, the more connected they become with what they're doing. The results of this can be seen in the hyper-realistic look that players, and the player they're controlling, are being shown to have on the field, and also the incredible confidence players have when jumping into the game. MV: How does this enhance player welfare? MV: In addition to realism, players will also feel more connected with the game and with their surroundings. The game will feel more immersive and engaging for them, and reduce the impact of injuries that can occur when players have to pause and recover mid-game for medical reasons. MV: How does the game integrate with technology like Elite's Player Performance Evolution

(PPE)? MV: All of the game's motion capture data is fed into Player Performance Evolution, which will enable you to know exactly when players are in need
